Wait for an up day, then buy SPXS and DOG. They're inverse ETFs that short the S&P and Dow, respectively.

a 7% fall is a crash??? On Black Monday in October 1987, the Dow Jones crashed by 22.6% in one day and the US Fed was there to bail out all the speculators, keep raging impotently at the system whilst LARPing on an obscure anime website.

>This is what it will open at

Look at the index funds for the markets right now. Down more than 10%.

The index fund for the Dow is 'DIA'

The index fund for the S&P is 'SPY'

NASDAQ 'QQQ'

>Fear.

I don't know why I can't see the futures anywhere, but the index fund for the Dow is down more than 10%. Well over 2000 points down right now.

You are correct about people getting in trouble I mean bankruptcy and banks failing is totally possible. Gold standard is a meme. Since supply of gold is super limited and slow to grow so would the amount of currency in the system, harder to inflate prices which is sometimes beneficial. There is far more monetary value circulating in the US than there is currently gold in the world. I looked it up there is approx 184,000 tonnes of gold in the world so with some quick maths I found that all the gold in the world would be worth $9 trillion. I don't see how we could ever go back to the GS. A correction was due because of overvalued garbage but that is to be expected. The economy is going to shit the bed because we have nothing happening with the virus shutting down so many things and we have no tools to aid the recovery process because the dudes in charge of the fed are a living meme who will die before they stop printing. We announced a stimulus package and the market rallied for like two hours lmao. Who the hell wants to go out and spend money in this shit when no one really knows what the hell is going on. I mean people are genuinely scared and looking at how stores have been raided a bank run really doesn't seem too far off. We enacted policies specifically in response to 2008 and now we are deconstructing them so the admin doesn't have to admit we are fucked. Banks can just lend money out to whoever they want and don't need any cash on hand. Watch the market this week no way Dow doesn't end below 20k.

I've hedged my counterparty risk across several exchanges. Plus I'll be taking profits all the way down. Dow 10k is optimistic. I can see DOW 2-3K by 2021.

If the Dow does go down to that, we are basically fucked. What makes you think you won't have counterparty risk failure and get paid?
